

ACC-72

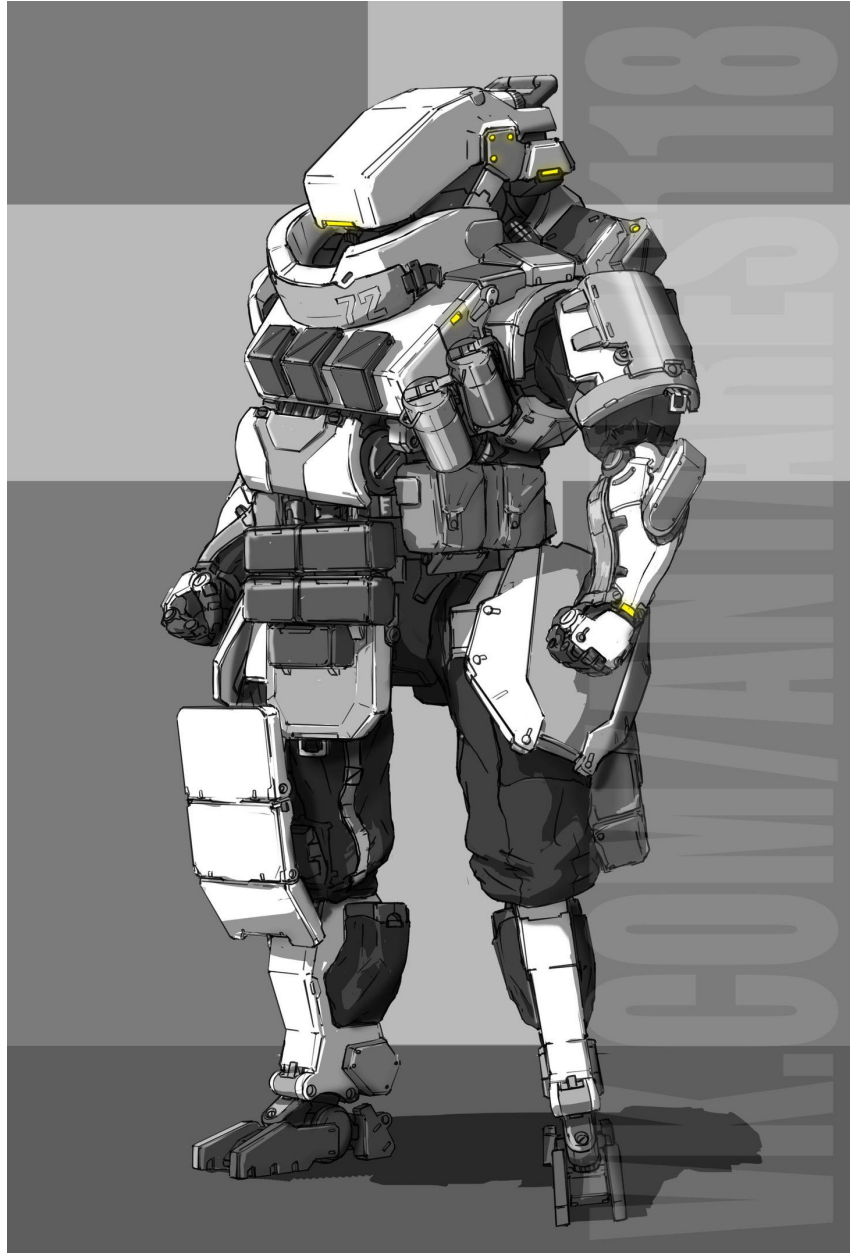

Figure 1: ACC-72 in his battle armor.

1 Character Description

A droid, seemingly of the class four variety, ACC-72 appears to be built for war. Covered in thick durasteel armor, the droid's figure is hulking and intimidating, standing 8 feet tall and weighing a massive 720 pounds. On his back he carries two large weapons. The first is a massive assault cannon, not unlike the weapons used by the heavy soliders of both the Imperial and Galactic armies, in fact suspiciously so, and the second is an comparatively smaller ion rifle. Both have a scratched out insignia and an innumerable amount of notches scraped into it, seemingly making a tally for each kill. His armor contains slots for additional equipment to be carried, such as grenades and other armaments, but they are currently empty. ACC-72 typically dons a cloth-spun cloak, which he refuses to part with no matter how dirty and damaged it gets. He keeps the hood up, although it does little to conceal his non-humanoid head and the green LEDs underneath. Owing to his large size, to slow his pace to walk with his fellow biological based friends, his gait appears to be slow, heavy, and methodical.

Figure 2: The assault cannon that ACC-72 wields

ACC-72 is usually quiet and polite to those who would interact with him. Preferring to answer in cryptic and short sentences, words are a commodity when conversing with him, although he doesn't mean to deliberately confuse. This standoffish behavior, however, is dropped when he finds something interesting, instead ceaselessly questioning and pondering on the subject, often to the annoyance of the subject in question. This behavior, unnatural given his size and normal demeanor, is likely a glitch or personality trait developed after going an unknown amount of time without a memory wipe. With regards to things that interest him, ACC-72 is intensely curious about the weapons of the galaxy, wishing to hoard and collect them, in addition to upgrading his own.

Likely originally built as a defensive droid, his armor incorporates a personal barrier and he is equipped with many protective battle routines. His reward receptors are triggered when he protects someone from danger, and he has turned that desire into his role among his party, as the steadfast bulwark protecting them from danger. It's unknown exactly how this role as a protector fits in with his obsession with arms.